HOW TO FATTEN DYSTERS. PICKED UP HERE AND THERE.

Yet it is the usual practice for dealers, instead of selling the oysters in the condition in which they are taken from the sait water beds, to first place them for a time-forty-eight hours, more or less—in fresh or brackish water in order, as they say. to "fatten" them, the operation being called "floating" or "laying out." By this process the body of the oyster acquires such a plumpness and rotundity, and its bulk and weight are so increased as to increase its selling value materially. The belief is common among oystermen that this "fattening" is due to an actual gain of flesh and fat, and that the nutri-

Furthermore, the fresh water will go in much more rapidly than the sait water goes out, owing to the fact that the latter is more dense. The result will be that the same time it loses, while at the same time it loses at portion of the salt. The same principle exactly applies to the syster.

Roughly speaking, the body of the system as a portion of salt within it is in equilibrium with the animal lives. So long as the bivalve remains in the salt water the solution of salt within it is in equilibrium with the water outside. But when it is placed in fresh or brackish water the sait passes out of the body and a larger amount of fresh water cities, producing the distinction of facts in the body and a larger amount of fresh water cities, producing the distinction of facts water cities, produci

Although oysters are generally floated in the shell, the same effect is very commonly obtained by adding fresh water to the oysters after they have been "shneked." Ovsters lose much of their sally flavor in floating, of course, and it is chiefly on this account that the spectimens one cats are apt to be assessall than would be agricable to the palate. If the "fattened" ovsters are let too long on the float they become lean again.

Experienced dealers say that the time for a lowing sall oysters to "lie out" is seldom over two or three days, at the end of which time the maximum plumpness is obtained. At Franklin City, Mid. Dublin Castle Scare Leads to a United States Pensioners' Arrest. INT ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

DUBLIN, Jan. 2,-Since the explosion in Dublin Castle on Thursday last the police have been extraordinarily vigilant in watching for dynamite suspects.
The customs officers, too, have developed extra activity in searching the effects of passengers landing at Queenstown from the transatiantic steamers. The first person to fall a vicitm to the customs officials' newly awakened ardor for the safety of the country is Thomas Ryan, an army pensioner on the lists of the United states, who was a passenger on the Cunard steamer Etruria, which arrived at Queenstown this morning from New York. He landed at Queenstown, and his foot had no sooner touched Irish soil than he was taken into custody on the charge of concealing a a loaded revolver and a supply of ammunition for that weapon.
